2) Should we remove religious holidays?

Norway has many public holidays related to Christian holidays, and there are fewer and fewer Christians in Norway. But remove religious holidays - it's too extreme, I think.

First, there are still more Norwegians who are Christians in Norway, and they like their traditions. It is Not necessary that they are religious. Many do not think about Jesus on Christmas Eve even and never go to church, But they like to visit family or friends and eat stick meat and Christmas cookies together. Many do not know what Easter selfish is, but they like to go to Fjel and ski. Norwegians have always done these things and it will be Strange to stop doing it or have to take a special permission for this.

Second, no one does those who are not Christians to celebrate anything during holidays. They can be at home, visit the FA-Milie and friends or just relax, just like more Christian Norwegians. In addition, they can take 2 extra days in the year for religious occasions if they do not belong to the Lueranian church.

Third, Norwegians' relationships with derivations get worse, whose holidays are removed, I think.

2) I am an atheist. But I respect all religions, all religious communities, and have nothing to the religious.

But it is a completely different matter when we talk about holidays associated with religion. I mean it's a bit meaningless to me if i have to be home and do nothing about such days. I'd rather plan

My vacation so I can use my holidays in a way that is best for me - for example, travel. Airfare-

I think it is a great idea if employees are given a certain number of holidays they can spend whenever they want. The means that those who are religious - not just Christians - can take time off during their religious holidays, and those who are not religious

Like me can plan our own holidays better! If you ask me, it's a win-win for everyone!

At the same time, I wonder what kind of influence this can have on school days, for example. When should LÃ-/-

The rows take time off? School holidays as of today are of course linked to Christian holidays. If more teachers would rather work

During Christmas or Easter time, we will get chaos, I think! It cannot be solved that easily and we need a national debate Around the theme.

I mentioned above that I am an atheist. But it is very important to hear from other religious communities - for example Muslims about what their opinion is, especially when it is from the Muslim lands most come to Norway!
